Dear

Upon receipt of your latest letter, dated 19 October 1977, I initiated further actions to determine whether any records were held in the Agency's file systems pertaining to you. The results of these investigations were completely negative.

Therefore, the position of the Agency remains unchanged, as stated to you in our letter of 21 January 1977, from which I quote: "...we have searched those Agency systems that might contain information regarding you and find that we were unable to identify any information or record that pertains to you, to include electronic surveillance or electronic equipment directed toward or against you in an experiment, test or procedure."

Moreover, I contacted those in the Agency whose responsibility lies in the area of science. One comment I received may be of interest to you, and I pass it along. The ability to decipher individuals' thoughts without their knowledge or consent would appear to be well beyond the current capabilities of the scientific community of any country. The closest to accomplishing such a complex effort of which we are aware, are efforts to determine an individual's emotional state by means of voice stress analysis or analysis of a person's facial expressions.

Sincerely,

B.C. Evans
Executive Secretary
